	"First named for her unusually cool temperatures, The Neversweat's name became more ironic among Butte's miners as her depths grew and her temperature rose. Likewise, our Neversweat Bourbon Whiskey, with its richness of body and depth of flavor, will make you understand why even immigrants who didn't speak a word of English asked for The Neversweat by name." 	"Headframe Spirits distillery in Butte sits atop four mining lodes, including The Destroying Angel. We love the rich history under our feet and we love a rich spirit in our hands. In the tradition of Butte's storied past, we've crafted our Destroying Angel Whiskey to steal a quick kiss from an oak barrel before finding its way into the bottle. The Destroying Angel Whiskey has a lightly sweet taste, great for sipping and mixing." - Reviewed by: Producer

	"The Anselmo Mine was unique: a zinc mine in the copper town of Butte. Finding its riches at depths of up to 4301 feet, the Anselmo miners had to reach deeper to earn their pay. We reached deeper for our Anselmo Gin as well, and came up with a unique blend of twelve different botanicals, including citrus and huckleberry, that give it a distinct, fresh flavor." Anselmo Gin was awarded a SIP International Platinum award in 2012. - Reviewed by: Producer
